HISTORICAL and PICTORIAL REVIEW of the 31ST DIVISION

ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES

CAMP BLANDING, FLORIDA

FOREWORD

Comrades:

At the end of our period of military training we shall carry away the memory of a proud duty, that of serving in the army of our country.

Our individual recollections will vary, and in time they will become less distinct against the broader background of our lives. Perhaps this volume will afford both a present focal point and a future reminder of the experiences we are now sharing. Its dedication therefore should be to the common accomplishments and the comradeships which will result from our service.

As your Commanding General I am proud of the way in which the Dixie Division has met the test imposed upon you by the strain of an uncertain peace. The transition from civil to military pursuits is not an easy one; yet the 31st Division has made that transition in a manner which gives the most effective answer to any threat to American Democracy. I am convinced that if bloodless preparation should unhappily give way to bloody conflict, the citizen-soldiers of the Dixie Division will continue to acquit themselves in a manner to assure the safety of our homes and the sanctity of our ideals.

I am proud, too, of the cooperative zeal which you show as we toil together at Camp Blanding and in the field. It is this spirit of intelligent teamwork which has made a working reality of the Dixie Division's motto:

"It Shall Be Done."

Served one month in Civilian Training Camp, Plattsburg, New York, in 1916. Served three months in Officers' Training Camp, Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, ranking third in company of 175 men. Commissioned Captain of Infantry, November, 1917, and assigned to 47th Infantry, Fourth Division, Regular Army. In 1917-1918, served as Company Commander, Battalion Commander, Regimental Adjutant and Plans and Training Officer, 47th Infantry, Camp Greene, North Carolina. Served overseas with the Fourth Division, participating in the following engagements: Second Battle of the Marne, Aisne-Marne, 5t. Mihiel, Argonne and Trench Sector. Commissioned Major, Infantry, in September, 1918, and assigned to the Seventh Division, Regular Army. Honorably discharged in February, 1919.

Appointed Lieutenant Colonel, Alabama National Guard, in June, 1924, and assigned as G-3, Plans and Training Officer, 31st National Guard Division. Appointed to Brigadier General of the Line and to the Command of the 62nd Brigade in 1930. Served in that capacity until assigned to the Command of the 31st Division on November 9, 1940, which is his present assignment. Promoted to Major General on November 10, 1940.

Has been decorated with the Distinguished Service Cross, United States; Five Battle Stars (four major engagements, one trench sector); cited by Chief of Staff, Seventh Division, for "Devotion to Duty," and awarded Distinguished Service Medal, State of Alabama.

HISTORY OF 31ST DIVISION

In the twenty-fourth year since it was first organized, the 31st Division is once again in Federal service, with its component units from four states training together as a unit. Just as their predecessors in 1917 were found willing and ready to serve their country, no matter what was in store, so have the present members of the 31st Division upheld that tradition of service and loyalty.

It was on July 18, 1917, that the War Department designated National Guard troops of Alabama, Florida and Georgia to form the 31st Division, with Camp Wheeler, Macon, Georgia, selected as the training camp. Mustered into Federal service on August 5, 1917, under the command of Major General Francis J. Kernan, the Division was officered largely from the Organized Reserve Corps and National Army and had a total of 24,100 officers and men.

After moving from Camp Green, Camp Jackson and Camp Wheeler, via Camp Mills, to the ports of embarkation of Brooklyn, Hoboken and New York, the 31st Division, as a unit, was in France by the latter part of September, 1918. Designated as a replacement division upon its arrival in France, the 31st was not privileged to act as a unit, but its personnel, assigned to various organizations of the American Expeditionary Force, served well, and in many cases heroically, through the last few weeks of the war. The 31st was known as the Dixie Division, with the motto: "It Shall Be Done."

The return of the division to the United States was effected during the period from November 27, 1918, to January 14, 1919, and it was demobilized at Camp Gordon, Georgia.

Besides Major General Kernan, its first commander, the division, during the World War period, was commanded by Brigadier General John L. Hayden, Brigadier General Walter A. Harris, Major General Francis H. French and Major General LeRoy S. Lyon.

Following four years on the inactive list, the 31st Division was reorganized on July 1, 1923, as a National Guard division with its component units coming from Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Florida. With headquarters located at Bartow, Florida, it received Federal recognition as of October 15, 1924, and Major General A. H.

Blanding, Florida National Guard, assumed command of the division on that date. He served until November 8, 1940.

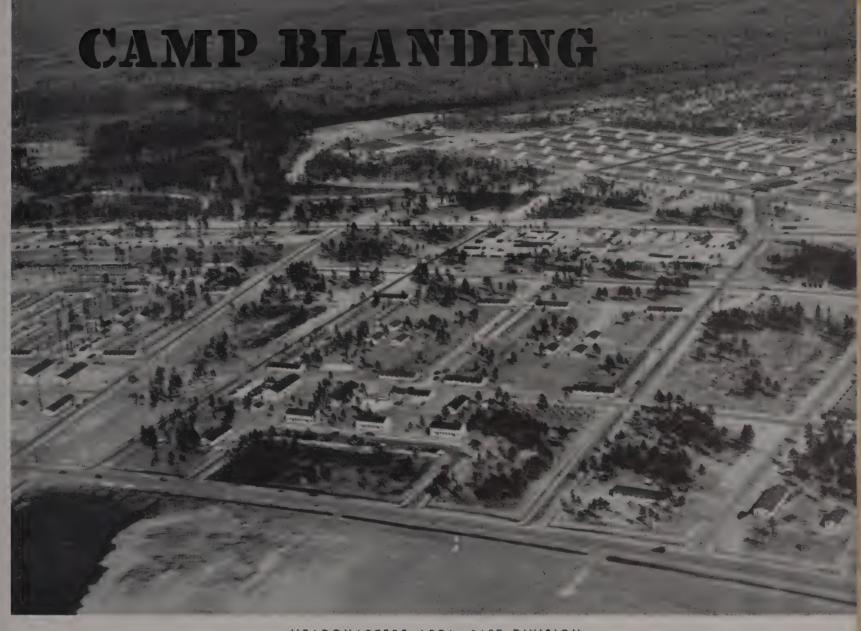

Besides the annual summer encampments and armory training programs of its units, the 31st Division, as a unit, participated in the summer maneuvers of 1938 in Mississippi and the summer maneuvers of 1940 in Louisiana, giving a good account of itself on both occasions. It was shortly after the latter maneuvers that the call to Federal service was once again sounded, and on November 25, 1940, the entire division was inducted into Federal service by order of the President of the United States.

After intensive preparations at their home stations, the component units of the division started their trek to Camp Blanding, Florida, which had been selected as the site for the division's year of training under Federal guidance. By December 22, 1940, the entire division had arrived at Camp Blanding and started its program of intensive training.

Major General John C. Persons, present Commanding General, assumed command of the 31st Division on November 9, 1940. Under his guidance, both officers and enlisted personnel of the division, living up to its motto, are determined that no matter what task is assigned to them "It Shall Be Done!"

THE NATIONAL GUARD

A Component of

THE UNITED STATES

FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT
The President of the United States
Commander-in-Chief

THE ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES

The Constitution gives to Congress the power to raise and support armies and designates the President as Commander in Chief. By the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as later amended by other laws, Congress constituted the Army of the United States in six components: the Regular Army, the National Guard of the United States, the National Guard while in the service of the United States, the Officers' Reserve Corps, the Organized Reserves, and the enlisted Reserve Corps. For simplicity only three components—the Regular Army, the National Guard, and the Organized Reserves—will be generally referred to in this book.

CONGRESS AND THE ARMY

Congress, under the Constitution, has the power to "raise and support armies" for the defense of our country. Thus Congress determines the size of the Army and each of its three components, including the National Guard, and appropriates money each year to maintain the Military Establishment. The Senate and the House of Representatives each has a Committee on Military Affairs and a Committee on Appropriations. Practically all legislation affecting the Army of the United States, except appropriations, is referred by each House to its Committee on Military Affairs for study and report.

The National Guard and the other components of the Army consist of officers and enlisted men divided into combat arms, such as Infantry, Air Corps, and Field Artillery, and into services, such as the Medical Department and the Quartermaster Corps. Each arm, service, and bureau has a "Chief" in Washington. The arms, services and bureau are as follows:

ARMS: Infantry, Cavalry, Field Artillery, Coast Artillery Corps, Air Corps, Corps of Engineers, Signal Corps.

Services: Adjutant General's Department, Inspector General's Department, Judge Advocate General's Department, Quartermaster Corps, Finance Department, Medical Department, Ordnance Department, Chemical Warfare Service, Corps of Chaplains.

BUREAU: National Guard Bureau.

In general, the arms do the actual fighting in battle, and the services assist the arms by supplying them with food, clothing, weapons, ammunition, and other supplies, and by furnishing transportation, medical care, and other assistance. The National Guard Bureau is described later.

THE SECRETARY OF WAR

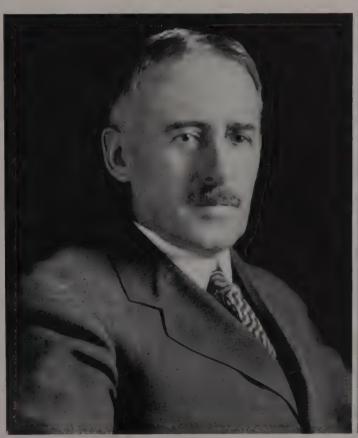

The Secretary of War is head of the War Department, charged with administering and managing the department in all of its functions, military and non-military. He supervises all estimates for appropriations for Army expenses, all expenditures of money appropriated by Congress for the support, transportation, and maintenance of the Army, and all expenditures for civil works placed under his direction by Congress. He carries out the provisions of the National Defense Act, and is responsible for the protection of our seacoast, our harbors, and our cities; for the development of improved weapons and equipment; for the instruction, discipline, and morale of all components and military training activities of the Army; for the defense, maintenance, and operation of the Panama Canal; and for the administration, government, and defense of insular possessions that come under the War Department. The Secretary of War also directs the activities of the Corps of Engineers in forming and carrying out plans for controlling floods and improving waterways and harbors for navigation, and recommends plans for such improvements to Congress, and makes contracts for their execution.

THE UNDERSECRETARY OF WAR

The Assistant Secretary of War is charged with supervision of the procurement of all military supplies for the Army of the United States, including the manufacture at Government arsenals or Government-owned factories of all supplies these arsenals and factories can produce economically. He is charged with insuring adequate provision for the mobilization of materiel and industrial organizations essential to wartime needs. He supervises and acts upon the purchase, lease, and sale of real estate under War Department control, including leases, licenses, and rights-of-way to others; the sale of surplus supplies, equipment, plants, and land or other facilities. He supervises and acts upon claims, foreign or domestic, by or against the War Department; clemency cases in litigation or remission of sentence by courtmartial; matters relating to national cemeteries; activities relating to the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice and Civilian Marksmanship; permits for the construction of bridges and submarine cables; and the use of patent rights by the War Department and the Army.

THE CHIEF OF STAFF

The Chief of Staff is the immediate adviser to the Secretary of War on all military matters. He is charged by the Secretary of War with planning, developing, and executing the Army's program for national defense. As the agent of, and in the name of the Secretary of War, he issues orders to insure that the plans of the War Department are harmoniously executed by all branches and agencies in all components of the Army.

The Chief of Staff holds the temporary rank of general while in office. The chiefs of most arms, services, bureaus, and War Department General Staff divisions are major generals or brigadier generals.

THE GENERAL HEADQUARTERS

The nucleus of such an organization was created by order of the Secretary of War on July 26, 1940. It is established at the Army War College, Washington, D. C., with Major General Lesley J. McNair as Chief of Staff.

LIEUTENANT GENERAL LESLEY J. McNAIR
Chief of Staff
General Headquarters

Its function is to decentralize the activities of the War Department by assisting the Chief of Staff in his dual capacity as Chief of Staff of the Army and as Commanding General of the Field Forces. Working in cooperation with all War Department agencies, the GHQ directs and supervises the training of all troops located in the continental United States, including mobile and harbor defense troops, the GHQ Air Force and the newly created Armored Force.

THE NATIONAL GUARD BUREAU

The Chief of the National Guard Bureau is the head of that bureau of the War Department which is charged with the administration of approved War Department policies for the National Guard not in the service of the United States, and with general administrative control of all War Department activities incident to the relationship established by law and custom between such National Guard and the Federal Government, except when the Secretary of War definitely assigns such activities elsewhere. His primary aim is the development of the National Guard to a state of high efficiency, ready for immediate induction into the Army of the United States upon the occurrence of an emergency requiring it.

The National Guard Bureau is the part of the War Department through which the Secretary of War keeps in constant touch with the whole National Guard. The Chief of the National Guard Bureau is an officer of the National Guard appointed by the President to active duty for four years with the rank of major general. As his assistants he has 30 officers of various arms and services from the Regular Army and the National Guard.

The National Guard Bureau keeps records dealing with the National Guard in time of peace. It estimates the amount of money needed each year for Guard expenses. It recommends to the Secretary of War how the total of National Guard appropriations should be divided among the States and Territories, and the District of Columbia. It also explains the policies and plans of the War Department to the National Guard; and it prepares regulations and makes suggestions of many kinds looking toward National Guard improvement and development.

On January 30, 1940, Major General John F. Williams, NG-US (Missouri National Guard), took office as the Chief of the National Guard Bureau. General Williams had completed just prior to his appointment as Chief of the National Guard Bureau a tour of active duty in the Bureau as Chief of the Personnel Division.

THE NATIONAL GUARD

The National Guard, by the executive order of September 8, 1939, was increased to an authorized strength of approximately 15,000 officers and 235,000 enlisted men. It is made up of citizens of the United States who are so interested in national defense that they desire to take an active part in military affairs in addition to managing their own private ones.

There are National Guard units in every one of the 48 States, in Hawaii, Alaska, and Puerto Rico, and in the District of Columbia. These units are distributed in 1,500 different stations. Like the Regular forces, the National Guard contains units of all the different arms and services that go to form a modern army.

There is a long tradition behind the National Guard. Even before the Colonies became States, some of them had their own active units of organized volunteers. In all of our wars, the States have given many such units to our fighting armies. Indeed, their part in every war in the history of the United States has been of highest importance.

NATIONAL GUARDSMEN ON MOTOR MARCH

The National Guard has not always been a part of our national forces. Originally it was composed of troops separately formed and trained by each State, and entirely under State control. It came under the Federal control only in times of emergency., Each State trained and equipped its regiments in its own way. Even the uniforms were different.

In 1903, however, the National Guard came, by act of Congress, much closer in touch with our National Government and our Regular forces. Since that law was passed, the National Guard has had the same kind of service uniform and equipment as the Regular Army and has followed the same methods of training. The law of 1903 also gave authority for the National Guard to have officers of the Regular Army as instructors, and for the Guard to join with Regular Army units at camps for field training.

Later acts of Congress, especially the National Defense Act of 1920 and the National Guard Status Bill of 1933, have made the National Guard one of the three main components of our armed land forces. These laws have established what is known as the National Guard of the United States as distinguished from the National Guard. Officers of the National Guard who meet certain standards of age, physical condition, and professional ability generally similar to those required in the Regular Army, are then "federally recognized" and appointed as officers in the National Guard of the United States which makes them officers in the Army of the United States. Practically all officers of the National Guard are so appointed. To the extent provided for from time to time by appropriations for this specific purpose, the President may order officers of the National Guard of the United States to active duty in an emergency at any time and for the period of the emergency, subject to the qualification that, except in time of emergency expressly declared by Congress, no officer of the National Guard of the United States shall be employed on active duty for more than fifteen days in any one calendar year without his own consent. The Governor of a State, of course, can order the National Guard of his State to active duty for training and other purposes in accordance with the laws of that State. All members of the National Guard take an oath to bear true allegiance to the United States and to their own State, and to obey the orders of the President of the United States and the Governor of their own State. In consequence of this obligation, they are not only liable to Federal call or order in a national emergency, but to call within their own States in times of local disaster or danger.

CALL

Perhaps, this somewhat complicated matter will be understood more clearly when it is remembered that under Presidential "Call," the National Guard is, in a sense, borrowed from the Governors of the States and Territories, and used to repel invasion, put down rebellion, or enforce the laws of the Union. No action by Congress is necessary. The National Guard units thus borrowed do become a part of the Army of the United States while they are in the national service.

ORDER

Under a Presidential "order" the National Guard of the United States, already a part of the Army of the United States, comes instantaneously into active military service. There must be a war or equivalent national emergency declared by Congress. The National Guard immediately loses its status as State troops under an "order," although this status is simply in abeyance. When the war or other emergency is over, the units have to be returned to the States from which they came. All units and individuals then resume their purely peacetime State status.

The National Guard Divisions thus ordered or to be ordered into the active military service of the United States by virtue of the authority conferred upon the President by Public Resolution 96, 76th Congress, approved August 27, 1940, and the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended (39 Stat. 166), will be enumerated later.

During the World War, National Guard units of the various States and Territories contributed almost half a million men to the Army. Two out of every five divisions that went to France were National Guard units, and by far the greater part of these saw service on the field of battle.

The National Guard receives money by annual appropriation from Congress for many of its needs. These funds provide arms and other equipment, uniforms, motor vehicles, horses, and airplanes, provide for the construction and repair of certain buildings at camps, and for sending officers to the service schools of the Regular Army for courses of training, and for many other needs. It receives money from the States for the building and upkeep of armories and camps, for extra field training pay and extra pay in times of State emergency, and for numerous other expenses.

At their home stations the units of the National Guard assemble at least one night a week for active training. They meet in armories provided by their States not only as drill halls but as places where arms and equipment can be safely kept. Often, too, there are meetings of a social kind, for there is relaxation within the brotherhood of arms, as well as hard work.

In the summer the National Guard goes to camps for field training. These may be purely State camps composed entirely of National Guard troops, or Guard units may join with parts of the Regular Army in large maneuvers. This summer training usually lasts for two weeks. An important part of it is the actual travel from home station to camp by marching, by motors, or by train, which gives practice in troop movement for field service. Similar field training may be held at other times of the year.

Officers of the Guard also prepare themselves for their part in national defense by attending military schools. Selected officers go each year to the service schools of the Regular Army. Many others attend officers' schools in their own units, or study the correspondence lessons of the Army Extension Courses, or otherwise improve their military knowledge.

Members of the National Guard who find themselves unable to continue their active military training owing to pressure of business or other personal reasons may be transferred to the Inactive National Guard, and thus keep their contact with the Army. Members of the Inactive National Guard retain their grades and may be called to active duty in case of war to fill vacancies in National Guard units. Members of the Inactive National Guard may attend training with active National Guard units under regulations prescribed by the Chief of the National Guard Bureau. No transfer is permitted from the Inactive National Guard to an active status. Above the grade of first lieutenant the number of inactive members is limited to the number required to bring the officer personnel of the Guard to war strength.

For strategical military purposes the United States is divided into four Army areas, and for military administrative purposes into nine corps areas:

There are many other National Guard units, which are not a part of numbered divisions, located in most of the States shown in the above table, in New Hampshire, Delaware, and Arkansas, and in Puerto Rico and Hawaii.

Units of the National Guard, like those of the Regular Army and the Organized Reserves, are designated by numbers. Regiments have, in general, numbers between 100 and 300, and infantry divisons have numbers between 26 and 75. Others may use their old names in addition to their new numbers, for example, the Washington Artillery, which is the One Hundred and Forty-first Field Artillery (Louisiana National Guard).

Cavalry scout cars in maneuvers.

The Infantry is the principal combat arm, though the Cavalry also comes into direct personal contact with the enemy on the ground and the Air Corps with him in the air. The Cavalry and the Air Corps have also the task of going out ahead of the other elements of the Army to locate the enemy and gain first contact with his forces, and after that to watch closely what the hostile army does and where it moves. The Air Corps, in addition, flies long distances to bomb the supply centers and other rear installations of the enemy, thus to interfere with and delay his operations.

The guns and howitzers of Field Artillery add their strong supporting fires to the bullets and shells of Infantry and Cavalry to defeat an enemy in battle. The antiaircraft guns of Coast Artillery attack all enemy planes that come within sight and range, and the coast defense guns of this same arm share with the Navy and with the Army Air Corps the vital task of protecting our shores from any possible attempts at a hostile land-

The Engineers plan and help to build the field fortifications of part or all of the Army when it goes on the defensive, and help it to move readily from place to place by building and repairing roads and bridges. This arm has many other engineering duties such as making maps and constructing buildings and railways. The Signal Corps keeps the different units of the Army in constant touch, during battle and campaign, through radio, telegraph, telephone, messengers, and other communication means.

The arms, assisted by the services, cooperate to the utmost in war to defeat the enemy, and in peace to prepare all components of the Army of the United States for an efficient and adequate defense of our country. At the same time, each arm has its own longstanding traditions. Among them is a fine rivalry in excellence at arms as well as a genuine spirit of close cooperation in all the modern activities of a major army.

THE INFANTRY

The Infantry is the main fighting part of an army. It fights on foot and in tanks. It can maneuver and fight, attack and defend, on all kinds of ground. In battle, Infantry usually has the main task. With the support of other arms, it moves against the enemy and overcomes him; it gains ground and holds it. If the enemy attacks in force the defensive firmness and fire-power of Infantry are the final means of stopping him and driving him back again.

The peace strength of Infantry units is roughly twothirds their war strength.

INFANTRYMEN ADVANCING ACROSS FIELD

The chief weapons of Infantry are the shoulder rifle with its bayonet, the tank, and the machine gun. Other Infantry weapons, all of them important in warfare, are the hand grenade, the caliber .30 automatic rifle, the pistol, the caliber .50 and the 37-mm. (antitank) guns, and the 60- and 81-mm. mortars.

The following table gives the characteristics of all Infantry weapons except the bayonet and the tank:

The Infantry is now being equipped with fast modern tanks, which carry substantial armor and machine guns. They can move about 35 miles an hour on roads and rapidly across fields, and can go at a good rate over rough ground. Tanks are organized into separate Infantry units of their own. THE CAVALRY

The Cavalry is a fast-moving fighting arm. It is divided into two kinds—Horse Cavalry, and Mechanized Cavalry which moves and fights in armored cars and in combat cars that are much like tanks. Horse Cavalry, when it comes in contact with the enemy, usually dismounts and fights on foot like Infantry. Cavalry on Horse charges at the enemy when it surprises small groups of his forces.

The Cavalry has many tasks in war. Not only does it join the other fighting arms in direct attacks upon the enemy; it also precedes the main army, exploring the ground ahead of it, driving back the enemy's Cavalry or other advance troops, and reconnoitering to find the enemy's main forces.

The weapons of the Cavalry include the pistol, semi-automatic rifle, caliber .30 air-cooled machine gun, caliber .30 water-cooled machine gun, caliber .45 sub-machine gun, caliber .50 machine gun, 37-mm. gun, and 60-mm. and 81-mm. mortars. These weapons are much the same as the corresponding Infantry weapons. In addition, there are a large number of combat vehicles known as scout cars, mortar carriers, combat cars and motorcycles.

Our Horse-Mechanized Regiments, generally referred to as Corps Reconnaissance Regiments (characteristic of the duty which they are designed to perform) are designated, one for each Army Corps. They are composed of a Headquarters and Headquarters Troop, a Service Troop and two squadrons. The first squadron is a horse squadron of three troops with Portee equipment for transporting the horse squadron rapidly when suitable roads permit. The second squadron is mechanized and consists of two reconnaissance troops of scout cars and a motorcycle troop. The National Guard has seven Horse-Mechanized Regiments and one brigade of Horse Cavalry. The numerical designations of these regiments and the States to which they belong are as given in the table above.

THE FIELD ARTILLERY

In battle the Field Artillery fires its accurate and powerful weapons in support of the main fighting arms, the Infantry and the Cavalry. The Field Artillery does not fight alone, but is equipped to defend itself against direct attack by the enemy from the air or on the ground. It gives its strong support to the other arms in battle through the fire power of its cannons, known as guns and howitzers. Its guns fire shells which do not rise far above the earth; its howitzers fire shells which curve high into the air and can thus reach targets protected from the fire of guns by such obstacles as hills.

The light artillery of our Army includes the 75-mm. (approximately 3-inch) gun, the 75-mm. howitzer, and the 105-mm. howitzer, which may be horse-drawn or truck-drawn; the 75-mm. howitzer may also be pack-carried. These weapons can be moved rapidly from place to place, and can be put in position, ready to fire, in less than a minute. Light artillery is used mainly in direct support of Infantry and Cavalry units. Our medium Artillery is the 155-mm. (approximately 6-inch) howitzer, which is truck-drawn and almost as fast in movement and action as Light Artillery. Classed as Heavy Artillery are the 155-mm. guns, 8-inch howitzers, and 240-mm. howitzers. It takes 1 to 6 hours to emplace and prepare these heavy weapons for firing. They are drawn by heavy tractors.

In detail the characteristics of these weapons are:

The Field Artillery is organized into batteries, battalions, and brigades. There are 78 Field Artillery Regiments in the National Guard at the present time. The numerical designations of these regiments, their

THE COAST ARTILLERY CORPS

With its fixed and mobile guns capable of firing many miles to sea, the Coast Artillery Corps protects important parts of our shores-mainly the entrances to our largest harbors and ports-from approach by hostile landing forces and from bombardment by hostile navies. In this task of coast defense the Coast Artillery acts in close cooperation with the United States Navy.

The Coast Artillery also has units with powerful antiaircraft guns whose purpose is to protect our most important centers of population and industry, and the main headquarters and installations of our armies in the field, from the war planes of an enemy.

Thus Coast artillery regiments are of two main kinds -harbor defense and antiaircraft. Sometimes two or more regiments are formed into a brigade under a single commander.

planes: training, cargo and transport, and experimental. The training planes are of various types including primary, basic, and obsolescent service types. Transport and cargo airplanes are used to carry both troops and supplies. Experimental airplanes are those under development.

At the present time the National Guard is composed of 21 Observation Squadrons, located in various States of the Union. The numerical designations of these units, together with the States to which they belong, are as follows:

THE CORPS OF ENGINEERS

The Corps of Engineers is the arm that furnishes technical engineering skill to the Army of the United States, in peace and war, and directs much Government engineering work of a nonmilitary or partly military kind. It is also a fighting arm. When a need for reserves of combat troops arises more pressing than the need for their engineering work, units of combat Engineers go into battle against the enemy like Infantry.

Engineer units are largely motorized. All have modern and efficient engineering equipment. A portable air compressor, equipment in each Engineer combat regiment, furnishes compressed air to operate a cross-cut saw, a hammer for breaking stone, and a pile driver.

Our small peacetime Corps of Engineers not only trains for its tasks in war but also furnishes skilled engineering personnel to direct rivers and harbors improvement, flood control, and other public works.

There are 20 Engineer Regiments in the National Guard. The numerical designations, their composition and the States to which each belongs, are as shown in the table given below:

THE SIGNAL CORPS

The Signal Corps trains the communication men of the Army. The Signal Corps speeds the Army's messages by motorcycle, airplane, homing pigeon, telephone, teletype, telegraph, and radio. It also develops, procures, and supplies signal, meteorological, and photographic equipment for the Army; and it produces photographs and moving pictures for purposes of training and for historical record.

In war, troops of the Signal Corps handle all signal communication at the headquarters of divisons and larger units and at the general headquarters of the whole Army. The Infantry, Cavalry, and Field Artillery install and operate their own signal communication systems in the forward battle areas.

In the National Guard there are 1 signal battalion, 18 Infantry division signal companies, 2 radio intelligence companies.

THE SERVICES

The "services" of the Army help the fighting arms. These branches relieve the fighting arms from the burden of such activities as supply, administration, and hospitalization. The Adjutant General's Department assists the Army's high commanders in issuing their orders and in the management of the Army's daily business in many important ways. The Inspector General's Department is the inspecting service and makes suggestions for the improvement of the Army. All legal matters in which the Army is concerned are attended to by the Judge Advocate General's Department. The Quartermaster Corps obtains and furnishes food, clothing, and equipment of various kinds. The immense supplies of arms and ammunition needed for national defense are obtained and distributed by the Ordnance Department and the Chemical Warfare Service. The Medical Department cares for the Army's sick and wounded and administers its hospitals. The Finance Department pays out and accounts for the funds Congress appropriates to support the Army. The Corps of Chaplains cares for the spiritual and moral needs of the Army. Like the arms, the services each has a chief with headquarters in Washington.

These branches are called "services" because they serve the fighting arms.

THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT

The Adjutant General is charged with the duty of recording, authenticating, and communicating to troops and individuals in the military service of the United States all orders, instructions, and regulations issued by the Secretary of War through the Chief of Staff or otherwise. He arranges and preserves the records of the military establishment in his custody and of all War Department administrative business concerning those records.

He has many other important specific duties, such as recruiting, conducting examinations of candidates for admission to the United States Military Academy and issuing their appointments and publishing and distributing War Department Regulations, manuals, and other documents.

The Adjutants General of the States and Territories are State officers, responsible directly to the Governors. Most of them also hold Federal commissions in the Army of the United States and thus also belong to the Adjutant General's Department, and perform both Federal and State duties. Their State offices, however, are not branches of the Adjutant General's Office in Washington.

In addition to the Adjutants General of the several States and Territories mentioned above, the Headquarters of each of the several National Guard Divisions include both officers and enlisted men who are assigned to the Adjutant General's Section of the Division. This personnel performs the administrative duties obtaining in the National Guard Division to which it belongs.

THE INSPECTOR GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT

The Inspector General's Department is an instrumentality placed at the disposal of the Secretary of War to assist him in the administration of the War Department and the Army of the United States. This assistance is furnished by means of periodic inspections and special investigations. The department consisted after June 30, 1939, of The Inspector General, with the rank of major general, and 64 commissioned assistants of the grades from major to colonel, all detailed in the department from various arms and services. In the National Guard and Officers' Reserve Corps, inspectors general are detailed in a similar manner. Twenty-seven warrant officers are on duty with the Inspector General's Department as assistants to corps area and department inspectors general. The department has no regularly assigned enlisted men.

The Inspector General's Office, located in Washington, D. C., operates directly under orders from the Secretary of War.

Each National Guard Division includes in its Headquarters an Inspector's Section to which both officer and enlisted personnel are assigned. The officer assigned to this section is known as the Inspector General of the Division.

THE JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT

The Army of the United States has its own system of laws for carrying out military justice. The Army is also affected in many ways by laws that are not purely military. Hence it requires constant expert legal advice on nearly all kinds of law. The Judge Advocate General's Department is the legal advisory service of the Army.

The Judge Advocate General is legal adviser to the Secretary of War, the Assistant Secretary of War, the Chief of Staff, and the chiefs of the arms, services, and bureaus of the War Department. He supervises the system of military justice, and in his office the records of all important military trials are reviewed. The Judge Advocate General also attends to the legal side of business, property, and financial operations which come under the Secretary of War, and to legal questions growing out of the status, relations, and activities of the members of the Army. He is also the custodian of most documents which show titles to lands under War Department control. Each staff judge advocate at the headquarters of a corps area, department, division, or other command, is legal adviser to his commander. His duties correspond generally to those of the Judge Advocate General.

Each National Guard Division has officer and enlisted personnel assigned to the Judge Advocate's Section of Division Headquarters. This officer is usually a lawyer in civil life. He is known as the Judge Advocate of the Division.

THE QUARTERMASTER CORPS

The three fundamental personal needs of a soldier, as of any other person, are food, clothing, and shelter. The Quartermaster Corps obtains, stores, and distributes supplies, and builds and maintains permanent and temporary housing for all the arms and services. It does not, however, supply weapons and ammunition, and certain other special items.

The well varied food that makes up the "ration" of the soldier (the food for one man for one day) is of a high grade. His daily meals are well balanced and prepared, and contain all the vitamins and calories necessary to good health. About 60 per cent of the food used by the Army, mainly staples, is purchased in large lots by Quartermaster depots and distributed to the Army posts from these depots. The other 40 per cent of the food, including fresh meats, eggs, milk, and vegetables, is bought on contracts made locally by the Quartermaster purchasing officers at each Army post. Fresh bread is furnished by the bakeries at each post which also make certain kinds of pastry. Pies and cakes, however, are usually made by the cooks of the Army in their unit kitchens.

In the National Guard there are 18 Quartermaster Regiments, one in each of the Guard Infantry divisions.

THE FINANCE DEPARTMENT

The Finance Department is charged with disbursing and accounting for the funds appropriated by Congress for the Army. It pays the salaries of all War Department personnel, military and civilian, and pays the amounts due for all Army purchases. The Finance Department also has the important duty of auditing the accounts of Army property (arms, equipment, clothing, trucks, animals, etc.) kept by the other arms and services. Whether the Quartermaster Corps buys shoestrings or the Air Corps buys huge bombers, the Finance Department makes the payment, insures that the cost is charged against the right congressional appropriation, and sees that all items bought are correctly recorded in a property account and thus placed in the keeping of an accountable officer.

The Finance Department disbursing officers also pay to members of the National Guard their armory drill pay. The United States property and disbursing officers in each State, who disburse National Guard field training pay, and other funds appropriated by Congress for the National Guard, are not disbursing officers of the Finance Department but are Federal disbursing employees, who are officers of the National Guard, and may hold commissions in the Finance Department of the Army of the United States, although this is not required.

Each of the several National Guard Divisions has its own finance personnel. This personnel is assigned to the Finance Section of Division Headquarters. The officer assigned to this Section is known as the Division Finance Officer and as such is responsible for handling all matters relating to the actual payment of the personnel of the command and in the settlement of other accounts.

THE MEDICAL DEPARTMENT

The Medical Department is the service of the Army that maintains its health, treats its sick, and heals its wounded. Through physical examinations the Medical Department selects for admission to the Army of the United States only those who are in good physical condition. It keeps the members of the Army in good physical shape through periodic examinations made for the purpose of discovering all defects early, so that prompt steps can be taken to remedy them and so that the Army's fitness for national defense can always be kept at a high level.

It examines all enrollees, gives them protective inoculations against certain diseases, supervises sanitation to prevent disease, inspects food and water, furnishes necessary medical supplies, and cares for the sick and injured.

There are sufficient Medical units in the National Guard including medical, dental, and veterinary personnel, to efficiently care for the health and comfort of the personnel of all the units of the National Guard under any and all conditions.

THE ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT

In war our Army uses large numbers of weapons of all kinds from pistols to huge guns and tanks, and tremendous amounts of ammunition for all these tools of war. It is the business of the Ordnance Department to design, obtain, and distribute to the arms and services that use them the weapons and ammunition with which war is fought. The work of improving old weapons and developing new ones, which goes on constantly in time of peace as we prepare for the defense of our country, is another important work done by the Ordnance Department. It also takes care of the large stores of fighting materials kept on hand in piece and in war, and helps the other arms and services to take proper care of the weapons in their hands.

The Ordnance Department, with its large force of technical experts, gives the Army the tools it fights with. In all its work, it cooperates closely with the fighting arms to furnish them the best and most powerful tools of war.

The National Guard includes within its organization 18 Ordnance Companies. Thus, it may be seen that the National Guard is complete within itself in that it has sufficient Ordnance personnel within its service units to be self-sustaining upon taking the field and at all other times.

THE CHEMICAL WARFARE SERVICE

Chemicals, gases, and smokes are a most powerful means of modern warfare. In the World War chemicals were responsible for one casualty in every four among our American troops. Our Army today must have protection for all its arms and services against the chemicals an enemy may use. It must also have chemical weapons and units of its own to use in order to wage war on even terms if an enemy uses chemicals against us. The development and supply of smokes, gases, and incendiary materials, and of weapons from which to fire these chemicals; the training of special gas troops; and the protection of the whole Army against any enemy's chemicals—these are the important tasks of the Chemical Warfare Service.

PREPARING TO ENTRUCK

MOTORIZED INFANTRY ADVANCES THROUGH WOODED AREA

Included in the Headquarters of each of the National Guard Divisions is an officer of the Chemical Warfare Service who is the special chemical adviser to the Division Commander.

THE CORPS OF CHAPLAINS

The Corps of Chaplains is specially charged with the religious and moral welfare of members of all arms and services. In war, each regiment, brigade, and larger unit has its own chaplain.

A chaplain is the adviser and consultant of his commander in all matters of public religious observance, and in matters involving morale, morality, and character building.

At the present time one officer of the Corps of Chaplains is asigned to each National Guard Division.

The strength of the National Guard on June 30, 1940, by arm and service, was as shown in the following table:

By virtue of the authority conferred upon him by Public Resolution, No. 96, 76th Congress, approved August 27, 1940, and the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended (39 Stat. 166), the President of the United States, as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, ordered into the active military service of the United States, effective September 16, 1940, the first units of the National Guard of the United States to serve in the active military service of the United States for a period of 12 consecutive months, unless sooner relieved.

National Guard Divisions thus ordered or to be ordered into the active military service of the United States are as follows:

This does not include the many other National Guard units already ordered or to be ordered into active military service of the United States and which are not a part of the numbered divisions shown above.

The training of the National Guard units thus ordered into active military service of the United States will be carried out in training centers scattered throughout the United States.

THE REGULAR ARMY

The Regular Army is the professional component of the Army of the United States. The principal duties of the Regular Army are to garrison our outlying posts, a responsibility which requires a permanent establishment; to provide the permanent overhead for the whole of the Army of the United States; to maintain a military educational system for its own personnel and for the personnel of other components of our defense forces; to furnish instructors for the National Guard and the Organized Reserves; to conduct civilian training activities, such as the Reserve Officers' Training Corps; and to be at all times available for immediate employment in the field.

The regiments of the Regular Army have numbers between 1 and 100. Regular Army divisions have numbers between 1 and 25. There are, in time of peace, many blank numbers which would be given to regiments and divisions if a war caused the Army to be enlarged.

THE ORGANIZED RESERVES

The Organized Reserves form one of the major components of the Army of the United States. They consist of units allocated locally for wartime mobilization, which in a national emergency will be filled with personnel of the Army of the United States from various sources. In time of peace, personnel of the Regular Army, the Officers' Reserve Corps, and the Enlisted Reserve Corps are given assignments to units of the Organized Reserves.

The Officers' Reserve Corps consists of citizens of the United States who receive military training through military correspondence courses, periodic attendance at meetings conducted for their instruction, and occasional periods of active duty at military camps or maneuvers, and who are prepared through such training to take up their military duties in the Army of the United States in the event of a national emergency. The Officers' Reserve Corps is the largest body of potential wartime officers in the military forces of the country. In time of peace, its members hold commissions in the various arms and services of the Army of the United States as Reserve Officers.

SUMMARY

The three components of the Army of the United States—the Regular Army, the National Guard, and the Organized Reserves—form, in time of peace, an efficient framework capable of rapid expansion if a new war should come. On June 30, 1940, the active members of the three components were as follows:

			Commis	-
				Warrant Officers	Enlisted Men	Total
Regular Army			13,831	763	249,411	264,035
National Guard			14,561	214	226,837	241,612
Organized Reserves		٠	116,636	_	3,233	119,869
Total	۰					. 625,516

All three components have an essential part in our system of national defense, and all three are thoroughly representative of our country and its traditions of liberty and democracy.

A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE 62ND INFANTRY BRIGADE HEADQUARTERS

The 62nd Infantry Brigade was first organized and drafted into Federal service on August 5, 1917. Composed of the First Alabama and Second Florida Regiments of Infantry, which were later designated as the 123rd Infantry and 124th Infantry, respectively, and the 118th Machine Gun Battalion, the brigade was sent to Camp Wheeler, Georgia, in September, 1917, and became a part of the 31st (Dixie) Division, when the division was organized in October.

After almost a year of intensive training, units of the brigade sailed overseas in September and October, 1918. Upon arrival in France, the organization was designated as a replacement brigade. The personnel of most of the units was withdrawn and sent to other organizations, leaving the brigade skeletonized. The brigade, as such, did not see action, but the men sent to other units served valiantly. Following the World War, the brigade returned from overseas and was demobilized. The first brigade commander was Brigadier General Robert E. Steiner of Montgomery, Alabama, who served throughout the war and until November 14, 1918.

On June 17, 1922, what is now Headquarters, 62nd Brigade, was organized and Federally recognized as Headquarters, 77th Brigade, with Brigadier General R. E. Steiner as the Commanding General. On April 28, 1923, Brigadier General William P. Screws was Federally recognized as Commanding General to succeed General Steiner. On July 1, 1923, the Headquarters was redesignated as Headquarters, 61st Brigade, and on May 12, 1924, was again redesignated as Headquarters, 62nd Brigade, which designation it has retained to the present time.

On August 24, 1926, Brigadier General Walter E. Bare assumed command of the brigade. He was succeeded in command on August 27, 1930, by Brigadier General John C. Persons, who served as brigade commander until November 10, 1940, when he was appointed Major General and assigned to command the 31st Division. Brigadier General Joseph C. Hutchison was assigned as Commanding General of the brigade on November 18, 1940, and he has retained the command to date.

The component units of the brigade, the 124th and 167th Infantry Regiments, with Brigade Headquarters and Headquarters Company, were inducted into Federal service at their home stations on November 25, 1940. By December 18, 1940, they had all reached Camp Blanding, Florida, where they are now undergoing a year of intensive training under Federal guidance.

FRED A. SAFAY

COLONEL

Commanding 124th Infantry

Colonel Fred A. Safay, commander of the 124th Infantry Regiment, was born June 15, 1897, at Jacksonville, Florida. From boyhood he had an intense interest in military affairs which was fully evidenced upon the completion of his education from the Duval County Schools. Upon graduation from high school he enrolled at the Florida Military Academy where he held a high scholastic average during his attendance there. On June 15, 1916, when most youths of his age were thinking more of sports than of war, Fred Safay enlisted in Company F of the First Florida Infantry in hopes of going to the Mexican Border.

Much to his disappointment, however, it was the Second Florida that was sent to Texas, while the First Florida was held in abeyance awaiting the call of the President.

In April, 1917, Company F was called into Federal service, and young Safay was recommended as being good officer material. He had held every non-commissioned officer's assignment in his company, and had qualified in all weapons as well. With the highest recommendations from his superior officers, Sergeant Fred Safay was sent to the Fourth Officers Training School at Camp Wheeler, Georgia. His rigid application to duty while at Camp Wheeler had its reward on August 26, 1918, when Sergeant Safay became Second Lieutenant in the United States Infantry.

The first assignment of the young Lieutenant was with the 121st Infantry of the Georgia National Guard, also known to fame as the "Blue Bonnet Regiment." Shortly after this assignment the 121st Infantry was on its way to France.

After service with the 121st Infantry for a short time, Lieutenant Safay was reassigned to the 18th United States Infantry, First Division. This Division went through the Boody battles of the Meuse-Argonne offensive.

When the Armistice came in November, 1918, Lieutenant Safay accompanied his outfit as a part of the Army of Occupation. A highlight of this service was the participation of his organization in the gigantic Victory Parade hald in the Grand Duche of Luxembourg in hon group was Lieutenant Safay. Had if not been for the efforts of the young Lieutenant and a few of his fellow officers in reviving the National Guard of the state there would have been, perhaps, no 124th Infantry Regiment today. In September, 1920, Company F was recognized and three months later Lieutenant Safay received his silver bars. Promotion to Captain on July 7, 1922, resulted in Captain Safay's being given command of the Headquarters Company located in Jacksonville, Florida. In October, 1930, Captain Safay became a Major and was given command of the Second Battalion, 124th Infantry. He held this post with credit until 1934 when he was transferred to the regimental staff as Plans and Training Officer. Three years later Major Safay was reassigned to command of the Second Battalion. In August, 1940, Major Safay was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel. On November 19, 1940, in view of the national emergency, Lieutenant Colonel. On November 19, 1940, in view of the national emergency, Lieutenant Colonel Safay was made a full Colonel and placed in command of Florida's own Regiment, which he had served so well. On November 25, 1940, the 124th Infantry was inducted into the Federal service and shortly thereafter moved to Camp Blanding, Florida.

Among the illustrious names enscrolled upon the roster of the 124th Infantry, no commanding officer has excelled Colonel Safay in devotion to duty or in excellence of service. No Colonel of the Regiment has gained more esteem and affection from his command, or has been tendered a greater respect. As the highest type of citizen-soldier, Colonel Safay's civilian career has been one of civil and social usefulness. Serving in various capacities with the State Board of Health, Colonel Safay has contributed much to the health of and to the security of the citizens of Florida. Since 1924 he has labored in the field of public health and upon his induction into the Federal service on November 25, 1940, was holding the post of Director of Sanitation.

HISTORY OF THE 124TH INFANTRY

That the 124th Infantry is entitled to claim its descent from the first garrisons in America established in the 16th century is evident through historical data obtained from a wide range of sources. Through the centuries its infantry units have formed the largest component parts of "The Florida Militia," "Florida Rangers," "Florida State Troops" and the "Florida Volunteers." It is not the purpose of this history to lessen in any degree the splendid record of the other arms and services of the State, yet it must be admitted that throughout the changing flags of Florida, her Infantry has played a predominant part.

The motto, "Florida and Country," adopted by the 124th Infantry and approved by the Secretary of War for use on the Regimental coat of arms, was first used as the battle cry of the Florida Infantrymen at the outbreak of the War Between the States. At this time there were many infantry units throughout the State which went into active service immediately. Perhaps the best organized of these at the outbreak of the war was the "Jacksonville Light Infantry," established in 1857. Because of its unbroken record to the present time, it is considered by many to be the parent organization of the 124th.

"LIGHT INFANTRY" HISTORY

The "Light Infantry" was mustered into the Confederate service as Company A, Third Florida Infantry, August 10, 1861. Its first battle was at Perryville, Kentucky, in 1862, but its losses were so heavy that it was consolidated with the First Florida Infantry and this organization remained with Bragg's Army until the end of the war. They fought at Murfreesboro, the Siege of Jackson, Chickamauga and Missionary Ridge, and acquitted themselves in such a manner that every member of the National Guard of Florida has reason to look with pride upon their achievements. At the end of the war there was a disintegration of the military units of the State troops, but in memory of their victories the Regimental insignia bears a "satire gules" or a red cross, which signifies their loyalty to the Florida State flag of the Confederacy.

After the Civil War the State Militia was very inefficiently organized. Numerous independent military organizations are mentioned during the years immediately following the war. By 1898, however, there were 20 companies of Florida State troops ready for the field. At the outbreak of the War with Spain, Florida was requested by the Secretary of War to furnish one regiment of infantry. All 20 companies volunteered immediately and 12 were mustered into the Volunteer Army of the United States. By May 23 the muster-in was complete, and the First Regiment of Florida Volunteers, numbering 1,001 men, was accepted into the service of the United States. The sheathed sword, from the Spanish War Service Medal, is placed on the Regimental shield to commemorate this service.

ON THE MEXICAN BORDER

After its reorganization following the Spanish-American War, the Florida Infantry consisted of the First and Second Florida. These remained in the State service with only minor changes until the disturbances on the Mexican Border in 1916-17, caused the mobilization of the Second Florida into Federal service. Companies M, L and C of the Second Infantry served on the Border until March, 1917. The cactus on the Regimental shield of the 124th Infantry represents this duty in Mexico. Close upon the heels of the Border trouble came the World War. The First Florida Infantry was inducted into Federal service on August 5, 1917, upon the call of the President. On the same date the Second Florida was also called to the colors.

The First Florida was disbanded at Camp Wheeler, Georgia, and the personnel was transferred to the units of the 31st or "Dixie Division." The Second Florida was redesignated the 124th Infantry in September, 1917, and sailed from Camp Mills to France in October, 1918. This World War service is symbolized on the Regimental shield by the addition of the fleur-de-lis or lily of France.

On January 1, 1919, Florida had no active, Federally recognized National Guard. During the year, however, the provisions of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, were put into active play and the National Guard Regulations were published as a guide for organizing new units

BEGINNING OF THE 124TH

The 124th Infantry Regiment, Florida National Guard, was recognized as the First Infantry, Florida National Guard, in June, 1921, and again redesignated the 124th Infantry, Florida National Guard, in May, 1924.

The 124th Infantry has had as commanding officers: Colonel Raymond C. Turck, Colonel Vivian B. Collins, Colonel Chester H. Wilson and Colonel Preston Ayers.

Various units of the 124th Infantry have rendered splendid service in the aid of civil authority, but the Regiment has not been called out as a whole since the World War. During the July-August, 1938, Third Army Maneuvers, held in the DeSoto National Forest, Mississippi, the Regiment received many commendations for the general efficiency and excellence of its personnel.

The 124th, under the command of Colonel Fred A. Safay, was inducted into Federal service on November 25, 1940, under the president's order declaring the existence of a National emergency. On December 18, 1940, the various units of the Regiment were ordered to Camp Blanding, Florida, where they are now stationed.

As part of the Third Army the 124th Infantry engaged in the extensive Louisiana Maneuvers held during July and August, 1941, there distinguishing itself. The Regiment was also scheduled to participate in the maneuvers of the Carolinas, beginning on October 29, 1941.
